Skimming

Heavy rush-hour traffic brings out the worst in many drivers. Traffic conditions make some drivers overly nervous. Uncle Billy, usually a calm and careful driver, becomes so flustered in rush-hour traffic that he can't carry on a conversation, and he forgets to check the rearview mirror when he changes lanes. A 2007 study of traffic flow in the Los Angeles area showed that the average waiting time at freeway entrance ramps increased to 6.5 minutes during rush hour because of the number of drivers who were afraid to merge into the heavy stream of cars. Also, heavy rush-hour traffic reinforces the aggressiveness of some drivers. Often drivers follow too closely during rush hour because they're afraid other drivers might slip in ahead of them. Drivers continue into intersections on yellow lights even though they will get caught there and block cross traffic. A psychologist who has studied driver reactions concluded that "stress conditions of rush-hour traffic cause physical and emotional reactions like those of a soldier in combat." Rush-hour traffic conditions show many drivers at their worst.

In Britain, the modern glass industry only really started to develop after the repeal of the Excise Act in 1845. Before that time, heavy taxes had been placed on the amount of glass melted in a glasshouse, and were levied continuously from 1745 to 1845. Joseph Paxton's Crystal Palace at London's Great Exhibition of 1851 marked the beginning of glass as a material used in the building industry. This revolutionary new building encouraged the use of glass in public, domestic and horticultural architecture. Glass manufacturing techniques also improved with the advancement of science and the development of better technology.
