Introduction

- Elder people are invaluable and they should be supported by governments. While, some people consider that young people deserve better attention of governments.

First of all, that is right youngers are significant human resources for a country. So they are effective in national development. Furthermore, training next generations is other reason for more governments attention. Therefor, governments have to invest for younger training and enhancement and also attempt to improve all aspects of their life's and prepare welfare for them.

First of all(basically), it is a fact that youngers are significant human resources for a country. So they are effective in national development. Furthermore, next generations training is another reason for more governments attention. Therefore, governments have to invest in youngers training and enhancement,--- also attempt to improve all aspects of their life'(?)'s → lives and prepare welfare for them.

By contrast, old people are historical, cultural, social, ... memories of a nation, generally capital of a country.

Following that, they could have been able to transfer their experiences to other generations. Additionally, in near past they have been young and they effort work for country and now they might be an organization retirements. so, they can be fruitful in crisis management and it will not be justification if policy makers do not import them. So government is responsible for their life quality and healthy.

To sum up, I can not give an exact recipe for this issue, however, elders experiences with younger education and innovation can be big ticket to a nation growth. So government may pay appropriate attention to both old and young people. Because all of them might have be strategic for country organize.
